⑤ If I had not chosen to go to medical school, I would have been engaged in developing renewable energy in order to make Japan the country comfortable to live in. As you know, Japan is poor in natural resources which can be used as energy. As a result, a lot of coal, oil and natural gas must be imported. But considering recent unstable international situations, we should less depend on other countries for our energy. At first, atomic energy was the most reliable alternative, but Japan has a lot of earthquakes, which means that there is a big problem of whether nuclear plants are really safe or not. So I want to take advantage of our assets: wind, sunshine and geothermal. If these renewable resources can be used more practically, I will be able to contribute to the future of Japan economically and environmentally.
