Ⅱ (1) The "Elephant" is letting listeners understand the trouble where the main character is in by telling about his conditions such as no money, no gas and so on, and conveys his next action, because according to the text, the "Elephant" is presenting listeners clearly the situation and background of the story and how the story develops from now on, and in this case the story-teller refers to how the main character tries to solve his problem.

(2) The author's "five-second moment" is not so much dramatic events in our life as trivial things in our daily life, which can be called our turning point in life with hindsight. Mostly dramatic events seem impressive to you, to be sure, but to others they are not so intriguing. Something like a life-altering event touches listeners deeply.
